A TRAP FOR RUSTLERS

TEX nosed his horse Lucky through the gate and up the lane that led to the Bar X Ranch! The surroundings were familiar but he'd never before seen any of the ranch hands who stood around and certainly not Emmet Dalton, the owner! Dalton had been there only a year but he'd already beat enough people out of their land to own half the county! Or so Tex thought! He hopped off his horse as Dalton came sauntering toward him!

"Want something here, stranger?" he asked.

"Yeah," answered Tex, "a job! Rumor has it you're looking for men! I'm a good cow-poke and besides—" and he gave Dalton a knowing nod—"I'm an expert at burning a brand!"

Dalton frowned but invited him inside! To burn a brand was to blot out one with another, the general practice in those days for cattle thieves!

"What's your name and where'd you get the idea I want a hand like that?" asked Dalton!

"My name's Tex . . . er . . . Lamson! And I'm just telling you what I can do! Got run out of Rocky Range in Montana and thought Wyoming might be safer!"

"But," he continued, walking toward the door, "maybe I better start hittin' the trail! Maybe I got you all wrong and I don't want to get turned in!"

"You can stay on here a while," ventured Dalton, following after Tex! "We'll see how you work out!"

The plan was okay but Tex decided to play it easy! That night in the bunk house, he batted the breeze with the men but made a point of not prying into the business of the Bar X too much! And he could see that the hands had been warned to watch what they said, too! It took about two weeks for him to become fully trusted and he managed it by tossing around a few words in front of the foreman to indicate that he had been tangled up in a rustling fracas and was in no mood to meet the law!

One morning, Dalton took him into his confidence! "I can use you," he told Tex! "I'm in your racket and right now I'm after old Ted Fremont's herd! We've rustled part of it but I want the rest! Then he'll be broke and have to sell out cheap! And he has the water hole!"

"I get it," grinned Tex! "What do you want me to do?"

"He lives down the road with his daughter Nancy! They've never seen you! Tell 'em you're a Government man and came to tip them off that rustlers are around and they'd better get their cattle into Dry Creek Canyon! We'll round 'em out of there about midnight Tuesday!"

Dalton looked at Tex with a devilish grin! "Do as I say," he said, "or you'll be sorry! I'll have somebody watching to see that you carry out orders!"

Tex stood talking to old Tad Fremont and Nancy, telling them the lie! But lazily, with his toe, he was writing in the red soil: DRY CREEK CANYON MIDNIGHT TUESDAY! Then he sauntered toward the gate, leaped into Lucky's saddle, and rode away!

The sheriff and a posse of Dalton's dispossessed and angered neighboring ranchers were waiting to catch the men when they herded Fremont's cattle up ramps and into covered wagons! They had long suspected Emmet Dalton of being the brains behind the rustling racket but had never before been able to prove it! This time, they had him dead to rights and Tex was the hero!

The sheriff slapped him on the back! "Good work, boy," he said! "Didn't dare to let anybody know I knew you before! But it's mighty fine to have you back!"

With the cattle thieves on their way to the jail, the sheriff and a few men and Tex and Nancy and old Tad all rode to the Bar X! Dalton was dragged bodily from the ranch house, protesting his innocence! But when he passed Tex and saw him with his arm around Nancy, he flared into a fit of anger that was an admission of his guilt!

"So," he screamed, "you double-crossed me! Went sweet for the dame, huh?"

"I've been sweet on her for a long time," Tex said, giving Nancy a big hug!

"In fact, Dalton, I know everybody around here but you and your gang of rustlers! I grew up here! Left a couple of years ago to travel with a rodeo!"

Then he added, "Nancy planned this whole thing! She suspected you all the time! She suggested I leave the show and try to trap you, Emmet Dalton!"

"Pretty smart little girl, huh?" Tex asked, giving her a kiss on the cheek as Dalton glared! "She's my kid sister, you see! And Tad Fremont is my dad!"
